CPD  The paper your technical career needs

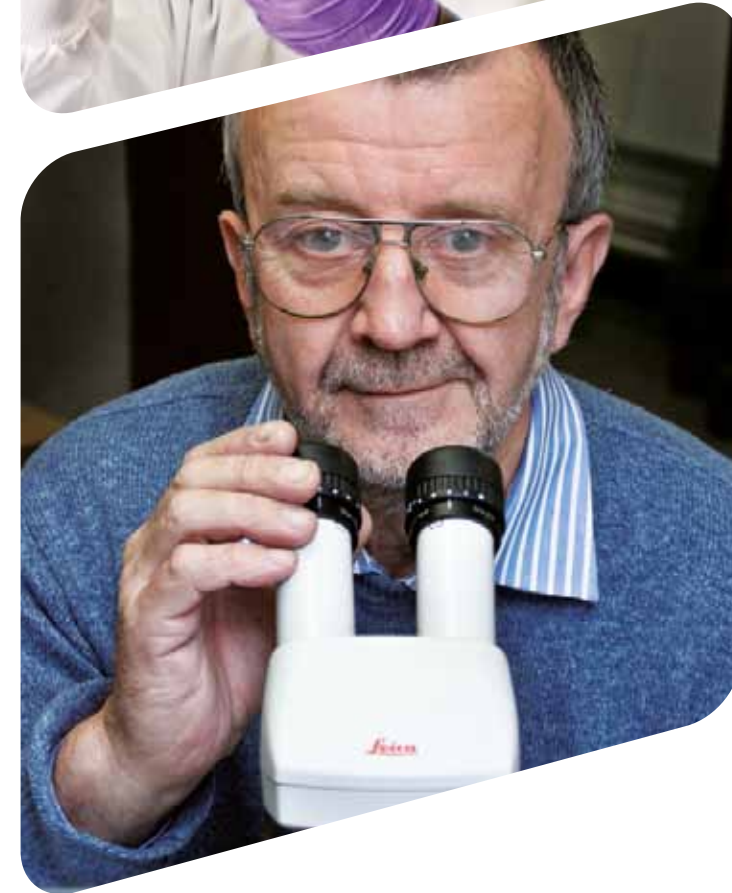

CPD The paper your technical career needs

No one can afford to stand still where their development is concerned these days. This is true for people looking to move into new positions as well as those happy with their current role. New technologies and techniques are constantly being developed by and for the Higher Education sector. To demonstrate your ability to an employer, technical staff must show continual development in a way that is relevant to the demands placed upon today's modern Universities.

Introducing the Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Award for Higher Education Technical Specialists

The Institute of Science and Technology CPD award, in conjunction with HEaTED, is the only programme dedicated to UK Technical Specialists. CPD is becoming increasingly important as people look to 'kite mark' skills and knowledge as well as demonstrate they are keeping up to date. The CPD award provides the latest tools to explore gaps in your skills, and most importantly the opportunities to develop.

Programme

Once registered you can start at any time and take between 6 months and up to 2 years to complete. You learn at a time and pace that suits you, your job and other commitments. The programme and learning materials are all accessed on line and are deliberately designed to meet the needs of all technical specialists, irrespective of role and seniority. The standards are high but so are the demands on the high quality UK HE Technical workforce.

After completing a short induction, you assess your skills usually with the help of your line manager and design your own development plan. This may include a combination of learning methods such as workshops, on-line techniques, coaching or mentoring.

There is an assignment to complete of course so you can /demonstrate the depth of your learning, and your expected to continue the learning process for around 40 hours per year – that’s just good professional updating practice anyway.

Assessment is nice and simple, an on line/Skype meetings or phone calls with a professional and qualified IST CPD assessor. This can of course be supplemented by meetings if needed.

COST: £975 HEATED institutional members (£1,275 non members)

‘I have long believed that a major weakness of the UK economy was its lack of a high quality education and training route for technicians’.
